

After the Asteroid

Matthew Sag

Emory University School of Law

One person's utopia is another person's apocalypse. This article considers the impending copyright asteroid, which depending on your point of view is either a broad fair use ruling four against AI companies, and asks, "what then?" The article considers the range of policy options open to the United States executive and Congress in the light of global competition in AI