

The Courts' Exceptional Treatment of Patented Processes

Tim Holbrook

The Patent Act generally treats all forms of inventions the same, with some exceptions. Case law, however, has come to treat patented methods differently and at times inconsistently. This paper explores this development and seeks to justify or reject this differential treatment.