Exploring Home, Identity, and Forced Displacement: A Thought-Provoking Event on Refugee Narratives with Author Wendy Pearlman

On October 23, 2024, the DePaul Migration Collaborative and the John T. Richardson Library hosted a panel focused on the themes of home building, identity formation, and forced displacement, featuring author and Northwestern professor Wendy Pearlman. Her co-panelists were DePaul's Professor Maria Ferrera and Professor Monica Reyes.

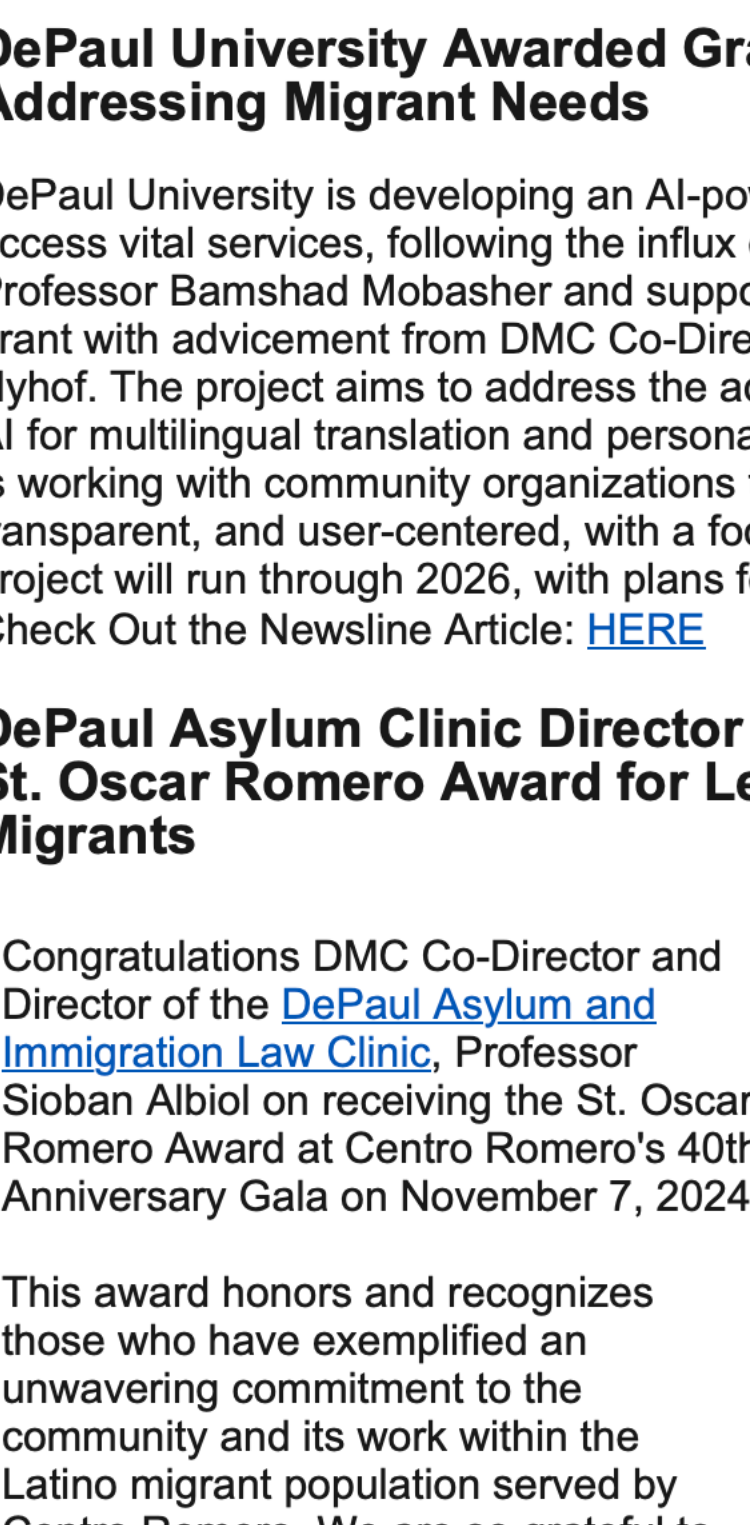

Wendy Pearlman opened the event by sharing insights from her extensive research with Syrian refugees across the globe. In her presentation, Pearlman emphasized that the definition of "home" is not fixed—it is a dynamic, evolving concept shaped by individual experiences of displacement. Through the stories of three refugees, she illustrated how each person's idea of home is deeply personal, yet interconnected by shared experiences of loss, survival, and hope. Pearlman also highlighted how home serves as a common ground for people to connect, fostering peace and understanding amidst the challenges of forced migration.

Pearlman's book The Home I Worked to Make focuses on the transformative power of storytelling. By sharing their personal narratives, refugees not only preserve their identities but also build bridges of empathy across diverse communities. In her discussion, she underscored how storytelling can serve as a tool for peacebuilding, connecting people with different backgrounds through their shared humanity. Following Pearlman's presentation, Dr. Ferrera and Dr. Reyes shared their own perspectives on the project, enriching the conversation with their unique expertise. The panel discussion explored several critical topics, including gender, health, diaspora, and storytelling. The discussion offered valuable insights into the multifaceted nature of displacement and the ways in which refugees rebuild their lives while grappling with loss and adaptation.

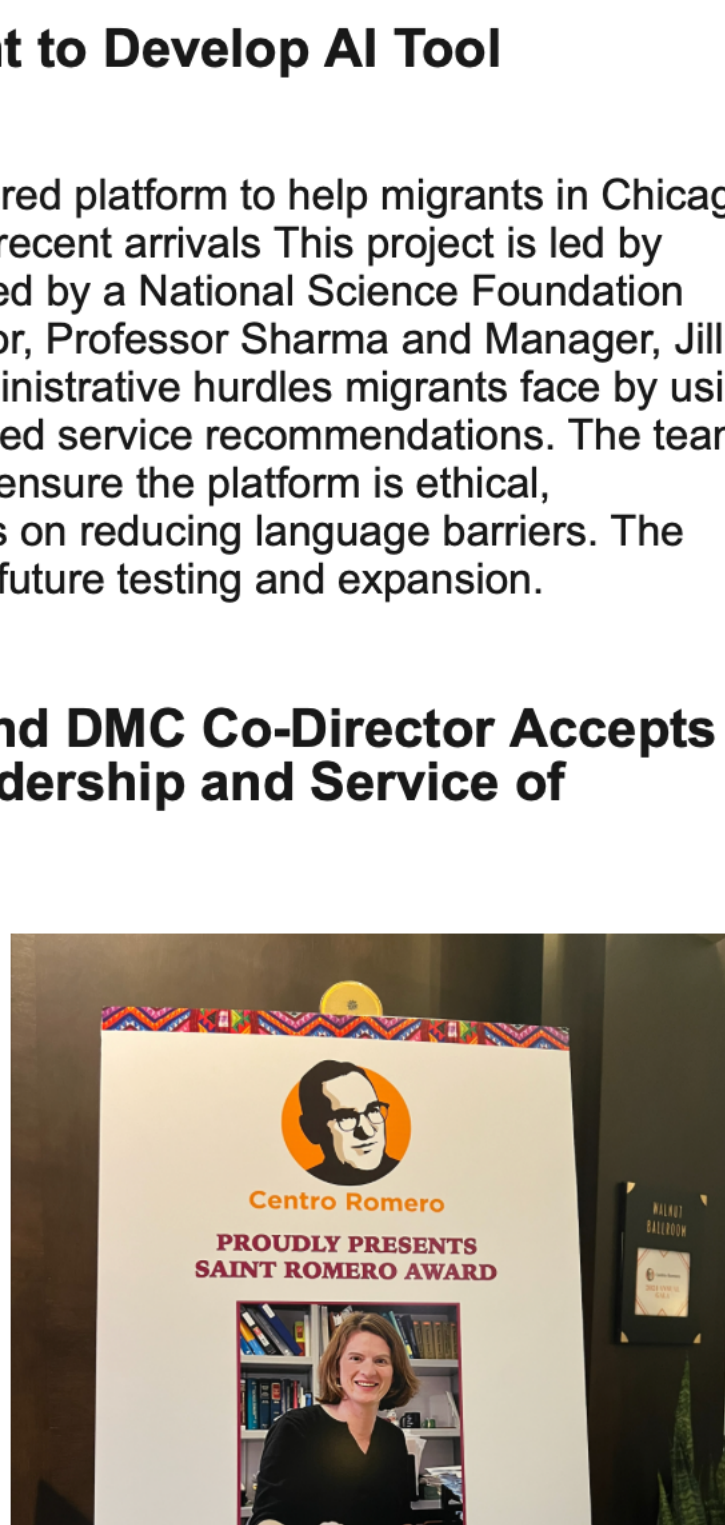

Alongside a wonderful presentation, the DePaul library put together a research guide to support those who want to learn more about forced displacement, home-building, and the refugee experience.

Thank you Wendy Pearlman, Dr. Ferrera, Dr. Reyes, and everyone who attended for contributing to a meaningful and thought-provoking event!

Political Representation and Economic Rights in the Shadows of Citizenship

ALLISON BROWNELL TIRRES*

In recent years, the remarkable movement for the political rights of undocumented youth—the so-called "DREAMers"—has catalyzed a critical conversation about the economic rights of all noncitizens. A growing number of issues have emerged that raise in response to advocacy by and for the particular groups of noncitizens. This essay situates this modern legal development in a broader conceptual and historical frame. It reflects on the relationship between economic rights and political aspirations in this movement, as well as in two other key legal developments in immigration history: the passage of anti-Asian alien land laws in the 1910s and 1920s, and the equal protection revolution in noncitizen rights in the 1970s. These three examples demonstrate the interplay between economic rights and political aspirations or dispositions in the history of immigration and citizenship. While our conversations about immigrant rights are often siloed into specific areas—the economy, education, politics, and so on—we see that these areas are not so separate but instead can be interconnected and intimately related.

Congratulations Professor Allison Tirres on your publication of "Political Representation and Economic Rights in the Shadows of Citizenship"

Documentary Desde Cero: The Migrant Journey to Chicago wins Emmy. Congratulations Dr. Arnold who advised on this project.
