Visiting Professor, Watson Institute of International Studies, Brown University (2004-2005)

Dean, Center for Naval Warfare Studies, U.S. Naval War College (1999 - 2004)

Upon becoming Dean in 1999, restructured the U. S. Navy's foremost strategic research center, raising resources for its funding and attracting to it a number of world-renowned faculty; strengthening its International Law Department; building up its research capabilities in Asia-Pacific, Europe, Latin America, and the Middle East; enhancing the quality and visibility of its quarterly journal, The Naval War College Review, and other publications; and drawing private sector resources to support its work. Under his leadership, the Center also carried out major risk assessments of security and terrorist threats in collaboration with federal and state agencies and private sector organizations. The Center includes 40 military personnel and 25 civilian analysts and researchers, as well as an annual budget, excluding payroll, of $5 million.

The Center's International Law Department is the Navy's premier academic center for the study and application of international law, including the law of the sea and law of armed conflict, and it boasts an extensive array of interactions with international legal scholars and institutions from around the world. The Center's "Blue Book Series" on International Law, published regularly since 1904, is widely acknowledged as an authoritative reference for discussions of key legal issues in customary and treaty international law. The Charles H. Stockton Chair has been occupied throughout its history by distinguished international law scholars and practitioners.

From 1999 to 2004, traveled frequently throughout Europe and Latin America, and worked on numerous regional security, democracy, and rule of law projects involving the governments of Switzerland, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Peru, Guatemala, and the Council on Foreign Relations, the Pew Charitable Trusts, the Ford Foundation, the United States Institute of Peace, the United States Agency for International Development, the Center for Strategic and International Studies, and SAIC Corp.

Professor of Strategy and Policy, U.S. Naval War College (1993 – 1999)

Member of interdisciplinary team teaching the College's renowned Strategy and Policy course. The course introduces students to the political, diplomatic, legal, and strategic dilemmas of foreign policy and military strategy through case studies of actual conflicts. The course also discusses the key principles and questions of strategic thinking as applicable to the design and implementation of high-level foreign policy and military strategy. The course is aimed at mid-level and senior military officers from all services, and senior civilian officials from various government agencies. 15% of the students are international.

Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense, Special Operations and Low-Intensity Conflict (Three-star civilian equivalent on the staff of the Secretary of Defense, 1990 - 1993)

As executive vice-president to the Assistant Secretary, exercised legal and administrative oversight over the U.S. Special Operations Command, its 40,000 U.S. special operations forces and their $3 billion annual budget; a professional Pentagon staff of 77 civilian and military personnel; development of policy and strategy for all U.S. special operations forces, and options for their use in counter-narcotics operations; expansion of their capabilities for complex counter-terrorist operations with NATO allies, and of their role in the counter-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction; the provision of intelligence support for U.S. special operations around the world; and provided policy support and advice to Secretary of Defense Richard Cheney, Under-Secretary Paul Wolfowitz, and Assistant Secretary James R. Locher. Key security issues addressed included the First Persian Gulf War of 1991; the restructuring of American military forces and strategy following the end of the Cold War; the management of security sanctions against Libya in the aftermath of the 1988 Lockerbie bombing; and humanitarian interventions in Liberia and Somalia. Awarded the Secretary of Defense Medal for Outstanding Public Service in 1993.

Charles H. Stockton Professor of International Law, U.S. Naval War College (1989 -1990)
